

Primary

www.historyonthenet.com

This website helped me find the history of the Constitution. This website was great for information as well as images. On the other hand, it was a little confusing to read and could be much more straightforward. This website led me to find the US Constitution website in search of precise information.

www.usconstitution.net

This website provided a source of the Constitution and information about the founding fathers. This information was useful for a much better understanding of the Constitution and the Second Amendment. However, finding information was difficult due to the website's poor navigation. This website paved the way for me to find the PBS website.

www.pbs.org

This website had videos on the Constitution and other such topics. It was great for finding public information on my topic. The loading time on videos and such could be a lot quicker, but overall, it helped me find the constitution center website.

www.constitutioncenter.org

This website had lots of information about the Constitution. It helped me find quotes and thoroughly understand the Constitution. The design could be more intriguing, though. This made me think about different people's understanding of the Constitution.

Secondary

www.linkedin.com

This website helped me find some images. This was helpful because it allowed me to express my topic in more visible ways. This website was far from the greatest due to making you log in and sign up, and having terrible navigation, making it difficult to acquire information. This made me want to find a better website with more information.

www.amnesty.org

I used this website for images of protests. It was also great for the recent news. The pop-ups and misleading direction of the website could be worked on, but this led me to other, more useful news websites.

www.theweeklysift.com

This website gave me a fresh take on the Second Amendment. It helped me grasp other parts of the Second Amendment and its entire meaning. Although it looks like a older website it led me to many other great websites.

www.newellta.weebly.com

The website is used for image selection and information regarding Wayne LaPierre. It helped me get a taste for different people who are opinionated on this topic. The website's overall design isn't exactly my cup of tea, though. This led me to think about other people associated with the Second Amendment.

www.newyorker.com

I mainly used this for pictures. It helped me show my topic in more ways. This website had a dark tone to it and only really focused on negative articles and propaganda. After this I wanted to find an article that was simplistic.

www.washingtonmonthly.com

It is a great website for information about the U.S. Constitution. This website was extremely similar to the tennessean. Although it did have less pictures and a faster loading time, It had multiple unrelated topics in a single article. After this I searched for websites that help me understand the amendment a bit more than I had so far.

www.tennessean.com

Used this website for protest images and other information. It was a useful website when it came to images and such. Its downfall was definitely its loading time due to excess images on one page. This made me want to find a different website with more info and less images.

www.giffords.org

Used this website for information about Gabrielle Giffords and images of her. It was useful for creating a sense of multiple voices and opinions across multiple people. When it came to facts and statistics, it nailed it, but it couldve been laid out much more efficiently.

www.apnews.com

This website was used for news articles, information about Michael Bloomberg, and images. It was great for newer news as well as info surrounding Michael Bloomberg. Due to it being a news website, it was difficult to find older news. It did lead me into thinking about not just mainstream news but more obscure forms of news too.

www.nbcnews.com

I used this website to find news articles about Ted Nugent and pictures of him. It was useful for showing people who understand my topic. Because of more recent news, the site was difficult to navigate, and it was hard to find my information. This website made me think about other news websites.

www.buckeyefirearms.org

This website helped me find great quotes for each page of my website. This useful website was great in helping me express my thoughts in a quote form. Although the quotes were stockpiled into one big list, making it confusing to read, it allowed for a lot of information. It led me to think about the people who made these quotes.
